

Just when Friedman was explaining what a bad, bad man he was, at Twenty-second and Armour avenue, a hand fell on his shoulder and an ungente hand searched his hip pocket, taking therefrom a gun.

"What's the matter with you?" he asked.

"Aw, cut it out, and tell it to the judge in the morning," said the policeman. "You're under arrest for carrying concealed weapons."

"Say, I'm an officer as well as you," said Friedman, flashing his star.

"That's a deputy's star, and doesn't give you any right to be around her with a gun hidden in your pocket. Come on along," returned the policeman.

Friedman did not want to "come on along," but the policeman, who was a big man, finally persuaded him that it would be just as well.

This morning Friedman was brought before Judge Beitler, who not long before had been called on to dispose of another Hearst thug, Edward Schaefer.

"Another one," said Beitler pleasantly; "$25 and costs for carrying concealed weapons."

"But judge——" began Friedman.

"I know," said Beitler. "you're a deputy sheriff and carry a star and think you're licensed to terrorize the city. Well, you're not, $25 and costs."

Friedman had no money, so he asked the court to postpone execution until tomorrow, when he expects the American to pay his fine.

Reported that nine deaths of workmen have occurred in the plant of the Illinois Steel Co. in the last few days.

The truth of this report cannot be ascertained. The company refuses all information, and it runs a private hospital so no leak will occur that way.

The police and the coroner say they are going to investigate the report. It is to be hoped they do.

The Illinois Steel Co., which is a branch of the trust, was censured by the state factory inspector no later than 1911, following an explosion in which three men were killed.

The inspector said the explosion and killing of the three men was directly due to the negligence of the company.

The latest death in the plant occurred yesterday. It was that of Nick Borevich, 8852 Strand ave. He is said to have fallen into a vat of molten steel.

Martin Schroeder, 5918 Henry st., Austin, fined $25 for running "blind pig" in his home.
